Macroeconomic Perspectives Roundtable with Quebec Finance Minister

CIRANO was a partner in this major event, which brought together a panel of eminent experts in front of an audience of nearly 150 people. Exchanges were very interesting and focused on the issues of inflation targeting, the soft landing of our economies and the potential of the new post-COVID economic paradigm in which we live.

Several CIRANO colleagues and partners were present at the event.

The St. Lawrence - Great Lakes corridor facing international trade disruptions

The St. Lawrence - Great Lakes region is said to be the world's 3rd largest economy. It is a region of critical importance for trade in North America. The poly-crisis we have just gone through (health, geopolitical and economic crisis), coupled with incidents that may occur on transportation corridors, has highlighted the need to strengthen our global supply chains. In this video, the experts offer their insights and part of the answer to these problems.

Pessimism risks plunging us into recession

PERSPECTIVES

For over a year, various surveys reported that Canadian businesses and consumers are rather pessimistic about the economic situation. Assessing the extent to which this wave of pessimism can cause an economic downturn is a methodological challenge that Kevin Moran, Associate Professor at Université Laval, Dalibor Stevanovic, Full Professor at ESG UQAM, both CIRANO researchers and Fellow, and Adam Abdel Kader Touré, PhD student at ESG UQAM, are addressing in a recent CIRANO study.

Publication of a new CIRANO report on “buying local” initiatives

CIRANO NEWS

Territorial brands strongly favoured by the Quebec government to promote local buying. These include Agneau de Charlevoix, Saveurs du Bas-Saint-Laurent or Aliments du Québec. In a recent CIRANO report, Bernard Korai and Rémy Lambert from Université Laval assess whether these initiatives have really been successful and propose several avenues of reflection to help the bio-food sector better structure the development and management of territorial brands.
